Combining a lens-less Pulsar with TV's Youtube player Remember how, in the early 2000s, digital cameras were just about the only way to take high-quality video? Well thanks to a team at UCL and Google, that could all change. Wyeth says the key to its new device is that it works on television screens. The video-friendly screens also don't cause eye fatigue and can be picked up even by poor vision, Wyeth says. Its prototype currently mounts on an optical TV screen and records video with TV cameras. Wyeth
