Sildenafil citrate (Viagra, Pfizer, Inc., New York, NY) is a new and selective inhibitor of cyclic guanosine 3',5'-monophosphate-specific phosphodiesterase type 5, which has been shown to be a key enzyme in the penile erection response. The purposes of these experiments were to examine the potential for developmental toxicity of sildenafil and its enantiomer, and to study the teratogenicity of sildenafil when administered by maternal gavage. One hundred seventy-two rats were mated with untreated males and injected with sildenafil or the enantiomer intravenously at dosages of 0, 75, 150, and 300 mg/kg/day or orally at dosages of 0, 1.5, 3, and 6 mg/kg/day. Some dams were not dosed and were given a sterile water vehicle. Dams receiving oral sildenafil at 6 mg/kg/day and receiving sildenafil at 300 mg/kg/day were killed on gestational day (GD) 20 or 21, respectively, and dams receiving the other doses were killed on GD 18. Both sildenafil and the enantiomer caused no maternal toxicity. Sildenafil and the enantiomer caused developmental toxicity when administered at 300 mg/kg/day. No limb or skeletal malformations were seen, but both ter ca3fb1094
