 An individual user account is created for each user that logs into the Exchange Server 2013 Mailbox server. Once a new user account is created, it is activated and the email address associated with the new account is delivered to the recipient's mailbox. The recipient can use this account to send and receive email messages. This account cannot send or receive email messages as well as receive email messages on behalf of other users. If you do not have this account, you cannot make changes to the server. When the new user account is created, the associated mailbox is created on the mailbox server. You can view the mailbox to identify the mailbox that will be used.

What I tried From continuity it is $\lim_{n \rightarrow \infty} f_n(x) = f(x)$ for all $x \in \Omega$ (check and is easy). Then I tried to prove f_n
