The characters themselves have their own set of stats that are applied when choosing an AntLion. The player must select what characters to use and which set of stats to give them in order to win the game. Once the AntLion are in place, you must do battle with them and feed each of them until they are level 10 or greater. Upgrades You upgrade the levels of each AntLion by feeding them minerals. Once a level is achieved, the AntLion will gain new abilities and traits. Gameplay Each of the AntLions have a unique set of actions and behaviors that are different from each other. You must choose which AntLion's you want to use and the actions to use. The AntLion can be upgraded and have new stats. You must balance out these actions and stats to keep up with the other AntLions, keeping in mind that you must keep some level of balance. Level ups Once the level of each of the AntLions have been achieved, the AntLion's will become more powerful. You can not level up all of them at once. "I've brought the complete AntLion system. All you have to do is feed them in order to level them up. Each AntLion is unique in their actions and stats. Once the level of each AntLion has been achieved, the AntLion will gain new abilities and traits. This system is designed so that you are forced to balance out the different actions and stats. There are three different attributes that each AntLion has. With these attributes, you can upgrade the AntLion." She handed the Emperor The information booklet, "You have to feed them minerals. Once a level is achieved, the AntLion will gain new abilities and traits." She then sat on the Emperor's lap as the Emperor read through the information booklet. The Emperor read: The AntLion. The Emperor bowed his head down and walked away, leaving the room.

I'm not sure what they intended to do with Moonquest, but all bets seem to be off now. Still, if anyone has any hankering for an undead fortress and wants a free one (barring any patches or patches), the last AntLion in my project is yours for the taking. That picture of the grey pyramids at the end of the tunnel reminds me of what Dwarf Fortress is like, only with a bunch of snakes, and maybe a few fire-breathing dragons in the background.
