OCAD 10.3.0.957 Professional Multi

In a world filled with the possibilities of digital delivery, the medium has gone from being the message to becoming the means of delivery for information. It also acts as a new context for interaction. Our vision is to embed you in a creative community where your design skills become the key to the success of your company. OCADVSA aims to set an example for the future of design and development and to become the most influential and trusted provider of Visual Communication Design and Multimedia training. See what OCADVSA has in store for you: In the Masterclass, OCADVSA offers three length courses: Short, medium and long. Whether your project is small or large, we offer a 2-day workshop (Small), a 4-day workshop (Medium), or a 2-week (Long) course. To illustrate this concept, a person with a visual disability is not just a person with a visual disability. A person with a visual disability can be a macular degeneration victim, a person with colour blindness, a blind person, a person with a low visual acuity, a person who is blind, a person who is colorblind, a person who can see only in the red range, or a person with eyesight that is worse in the dark, and a person whose visual perception is shaped by physical disabilities (these can include people who are colourblind, who have double vision as a result of cataracts, or who have failed eyes due to macular degeneration). If these are each uniquely and multi-dimensionally defined then design can take place across every dimension at once, but if they were identified as a single person with a problem then design for them can focus on the dimension that is causing the problem (being a man with eyesight problems would get a different treatment from being a woman whose doctor told her that having astigmatism is worse when shes lying down).
