We describe a case of scleroderma (systemic sclerosis, localized scleroderma) with a liver histology compatible with primary biliary cirrhosis. Symptoms and serology were compatible with a diagnosis of scleroderma. However, a serologic test proved positive for antimitochondrial antibodies to the 2-oxo-sterol derivative, 7-ketocholesterol, a major pathogenic metabolite of cholesterol. The association of scleroderma with primary biliary cirrhosis has never been reported previously. After a study of the available literature, a possible pathogenic mechanism for the association between the two diseases is described. The precise physiopathologic relationships of these two entities are still poorly understood, but the lack of any other apparent cause for the liver disease of our patient leads us to propose that the primary biliary cirrhosis was the consequence of a disorder of immunoregulation. Comparison of coagulation markers between stroke and non-stroke patients with type 2 diabetes in China. Stroke is the second most common cause of death and disability among patients with diabetes in many parts of the world. Although increased stroke risk has been extensively demonstrated in patients with type 2 diabetes, the coagulation abnormality in this population is still unclear. The aim of this study was to investigate the underlying hypercoagulability in stroke patients with type 2 diabetes. We evaluated the coagulation markers and platelet function in newly diagnosed type 2 diabetic patients with stroke (n=93) and in controls without stroke (n=74).
